There is an honesty to our dreaming psyche as if, in its innocence, it had no choice but to tell us the truth about our life, regardless of our waking interest in knowing that truth. This most private of all communications requires some kind of public airing for its message to be fully apprehended because of our resistance to facing certain truths about ourselves. A dream remembered is a dream ready to be understood. It is as if the dream furnishes us with the connective tissue needed to repair areas of disconnection with our past and others in the present.

Speaker: Carol Kemelgor, LCSW is a Psychotherapist and Psychoanalyst who spent 11 years in the late Monte Ullman's dream group and uses his unique way of approaching dreamwork in both her individual work with patients and a dream group of her own. She is the co-author of "Athena Unbound: The Advancement of Women in Science and Technology" and numerous journal articles. She graduated from the Westchester Center for Psychoanalysis and Psychotherapy and is in private practice in Goldens Bridge, NY.
